Biography

An urban, public, and digital historian, Mark Tebeau has directed more than two dozen digital humanities, oral history, and public history projects. Along with co-editors Serge Noiret and Gerben Zaagsma, he recently authored A Handbook of Digital Public History (De Gruyter Oldenbourg.) In Fall 2022, Tebeau served as the first "Public Historian in Residence" at the Centre for Contemporary and Digital History (C2DH) at the University of Luxembourg.

In March 2020, Tebeau co-created and co-directs A Journal of the Plague Year: An Archive of Covid-19 an international curatorial consortium that is building a crowdsourced digital archive documenting the pandemic. With attention to silences evident in traditional archives, JOTPY is connecting and linking data drawn from around the United States and the world into an archive that will help present and future researchers understand this tenuous moment.

Tebeau leads the development of Curatescape a framework for mobile publishing that seeks to make open-source and/or low-cost hosted mobile tools available to scholars and curators. With funding from the NEH Office of Digital Humanities, Curatescape is being used by more than 20 cultural organizations, universities, and heritage preservation organizations to curate landscapes and museums. Projects include Salt River Stories, Cleveland Historical (which Tebeau co-directs), Spokane Historical, Baltimore Heritage, New Orleans Historical, Explore Kentucky, and Connecticut Communities.

Prior to joining Arizona State University in 2013, Tebeau founded and directed the Center for Public History + Digital Humanities at Cleveland State University. Tebeau and the center collected more than 1200 oral histories that explore the history of the Northeast Ohio region.

As an urban historian, Tebeau's first book, "Eating Smoke: Fire in Urban America, 1800-1950" (Johns Hopkins, 2003) examined how urban residents physical and metaphorically constructed American cities in response to the risk of fire. He is now completing a book that explores the history of public gardens, monuments, and public art through the lens of the Cleveland Cultural Gardens.

He can be found on twitter @urbanhumanist.

Mobile Museum Initiative, Funded by National Endowment for the Humanities June 1, 2013 - August 1, 2015 $60,000.00), Completed, Aug 2015, Mark Tebeau

The Center for Public History + Digital Humanities (CPHDH) and the Ohio Historical Society seek NEH Level II Start-Up support for the Mobile Museum Initiative (MMI) to extend our understanding of best interpretive and technological practices for mobile interpretation in museum settings. MMI innovates both in technology and interpretive humanities practice. On the interpretive side, the project proposes to challenge the conventional approach to app deployment in museum settings that is built around museum navigation and pays little attention to visitor usage patterns. We will be recommending an interpretive practice that emphasizes connectivity between objects around themes, ideas, and chronologies. In addition, we will emphasize the foregrounding of visitor studies as a significant part of the design and deployment of mobile applications. On the technology side, CPHDH will work to release a beta version Curatescape Museums an open-source (and, optionally, hosted) software application.

Mobile Historical, Funded by National Endowment for the Humanities September 1, 2011 - November 1, 2012 $49,990.00), Completed, Aug 2012, Mark Tebeau

The Center for Public History + Digital Humanities (CPHDH) seeks NEH Level II Start-Up support for work leading toward the release of Mobile Historical, an open-source (and, optionally, hosted) software application (app) that allows cultural institutions, K-16 teachers, and university-based humanists to publish humanities information to mobile devices. The proposed project builds and extends (dramatically so) an existing mobile app development project aimed at curating the city, Cleveland Historical. We seek funding to scale up, revise, and extend our previous work toward the creation of the open-source tool Mobile Historical. Thus, the principal activities of this proposal are focused on creating a new vehicle for interpretive humanities publishing in mobile environments via innovative technologies and guidance on how to curate humanities content, including especially developing approaches to state-of-the-art interactive humanistic learning for broad public audiences and users.

<https://curatescape.org/>

Curatescape is a web and mobile app framework for publishing location-based content using the Omeka content management system.

Curatescape is an affordable and user-friendly solution that allows small to mid-sized cultural organizations, preservation groups, or educational institutions an opportunity to reclaim their interpretive voice and reconnect to their communities and audiences. Read more about "The why" of Curatescape

Curatescape provides content creators the ability to curate outdoor landscapes or indoor museum settings, publishing to mobile devices and the web. When deploying Curatescape, clients received a mobile-optimized website, native apps for iOS (iPhone; iPad coming soon) and Android devices. A turnkey solution, Curatescape comes complete with customized brand identity, consulting and content-development support, templates for marketing materials, and an easy-to-use content management system. Using the Omeka platform, clients are able to update their website and mobile app content dynamically. Curatescape has wide-ranging functionality including the following: content geolocated on a map (or tied to the organization of your museum/gallery), tours, search and browsing functionality, layered multimedia, social media, analytics for web and mobile, as well as a growing number of additional features and functionalities.

Conceptually, Curatescape emphasizes storytelling, rather than the display of single archival objects, the default approach for so many mobile apps. Our emphasis on stories construes the story broadly. A story can be told in many ways, from the historical to environmental, from the literary to the architectural, or using any approach that builds meaning through evoking context, place, or identity. Good storytelling, then, builds context through text, images, and multimedia, and is fundamental to humanities interpretation. The information architecture of Curatescape is built with this approach in mind.

<https://covid-19archive.org/>

Co-author: 4

A Journal of a Plague Year: An Archive of Covid-19 is a rapid-response digital archive of the pandemic, formed in March 2020. Operated by a curatorial collective representing more than 100 galleries, archives, libraries, museums, and universities in the United States (primarily) as well as globally, the archive collected nearly 15K digital artifacts, contributed by about 20,000 individuals. The archive has received more than 300,000 visitors. The curatorial collaborative broadly shares authority, including researchers in Asia, Australia, the United Kingdom, Central America, Canada, and the United States.

Ostman, R., Tebeau, M., & Martin, P. (2022). National traveling exhibition: Climates of inequality: Stories of environmental justice

<https://climatesofinequality.org/>

Co-author: 2, Author: 1

Climates of Inequality is a participatory public memory project created by students, educators, and community leaders in over 20 cities across the US and around the world. Local teams work together to activate the histories of "frontline" communities: those who have contributed the least to the climate crisis but bear its heaviest burdens. Their multi-media portraits expose the roots of current environmental injustice, and share generations of frontline communities' strategies for resistance, resilience, and mitigation. The project promotes future visions for confronting the climate crisis that understand, and undo, past environmental harms. By compiling these histories in an evolving, internationally traveling exhibit with local events at every stop, this project seeks to affirm frontline communities' work and inspire others to action for climate and environmental justice.
